

With her husband and children, Patty Barthel relied on the healing strength of others in addition to advanced medical care to help her become the survivor she is today. "The actual treatment for cancer is tough, but with the support of many people, you will get through it," she said. She joins the Avera Race to help others and to honor her mother and those who have passed away from the disease. "I want to bring awareness that this disease will most likely affect you in some form or another and that funds are needed to find a cure." Today, Patty continues to pray and hope for a cure.
