

Donna is the mother of three daughters and several grandchildren. After the devastating news that the lump in her breast was positive for cancer, Donna was angry and afraid. In looking back, however, she recalls many "coincidences" that helped make her cancer a positive experience. Donna's daughter, who had returned to live in Sioux Falls just three months after her diagnosis, is the person that suggested Donna go to the Avera Cancer Institute. "Today, the staff at the Avera Cancer Institute has become an important part of my life," Donna said. She is thankful for the support of her family, especially her children and special friend, as well as all of her friends. "I want other survivors to know," Donna said, "there is life both during and after cancer, and life is good."
